EXECUTIVE MESSAGE

" think you guys are a really terrific organisation. I'm kinda famous for not joining organisations, however, I'm actually proud to be one of yours," said director Quentin Tarantino, upon collecting his Original Screenplay BAFTA for Django Unchained.

At the risk of sounding dangerously sentimental, we are incredibly proud of our members, too. While recognising and rewarding excellence at our Awards ceremonies will always be at the heart of what we do, it's our work away from the red carpet where our commitment to the film, television and games industries truly manifests itself – and our members, including Mr Tarantino, play a huge part in that.

Encouraging young people into film, television and games by giving them access to some of the best talents in the business is a keystone of our activity. In the past year, we've expanded our live events programme; we've launched our Scholarships scheme, allowing students to continue their studies; and our Young Game Designers competition enjoyed another successful year. Our inaugural Career Pathways Survey helped us understand the challenges facing young people considering a career in our industries, and how we can help.

None of this work would be possible without our own behind-the-scenes crew of members, willing to share their time and expertise to help nurture and inspire the next generation of British talent. It's their accomplishments that provide the platform from which the future stars of the film, television and games industries can grow. We are proud of their role in proving that BAFTA is so much more than just the red carpet.

HARMONY KORINE ON FILMMAKING, VIA BAFTA GURU

EE BRITISH ACADEMY FILM AVVARDS

Setting the gold standard for film professionals everywhere, the EE British Academy Film Awards is undoubtedly a highlight of the international film calendar. And we had special reason to celebrate this year with 2013 marking our 65th Awards anniversary.

The run up to the Awards was almost as exciting as the ceremony itself, as we embarked on our biggest promotional campaign to date. With the tagline 'Share The Moment', our campaign dominated all media in the fortnight leading up to the event, from posters on bus sides, Piccadilly Lite and the London Underground to a high profile cinema trailer and ads on our social media hubs.

Our partner Asprey hosted its pre-Awards Nominees Party (now in its fourth year), which saw such Hollywood luminaries as George Clooney, Ben Affleck, Bradley Cooper, Jessica Chastain and Sally Field attend.

When Awards day came, it didn't disappoint with the red carpet packed with the brightest and most glamorous stars the film industry has to offer, from homegrown talent to the biggest names from around the world, including Quentin Tarantino, Jennifer Lawrence, Ben Whishaw, Marion Cotillard, Ang Lee and many more. With such talent on show, it was no surprise that the BBC One broadcast attracted the highest number of viewers for a decade.

Les Misérables was the dominant film on the night, but it was Ben Affleck's Argo that won the top honour of Best Film, alongside the Director and Editing awards. The Academy's two highest accolades went to Tessa Ross, for her Outstanding British Contribution to Cinema, and Sir Alan Parker, who was presented with the Fellowship.

However, perhaps the most prominent difference to this Film Awards from previous years happened behind the scenes, with the number of voting rounds reduced from three to two. We made this decision to simplify the process, with two rounds offering greater clarity and the potential for more involvement from our members.

BAFTA LOS ANGELES BRITANNIA AWARDS

Although we may be predominantly known for our Film and Television Awards, BAFTA actually hosts eight annual Awards in total. One such celebration is the BAFTA Los Angeles Britannia Awards, held in LA.

With BAFTA Los Angeles celebrating its 25th anniversary, the Britannia Awards in 2012 attracted some of the highest profile names in the industry with the prestigious ceremony boasting an enviable list of presenters and guests, including Harrison Ford, Steven Spielberg, Sam Mendes, Roger Corman, Franka Potente, Stephen Merchant and Jane Seymour.

Held at the Beverly Hilton Hotel and hosted by Alan Cumming, Brit actors Daniel Day-Lewis and Daniel Craig were among the stars honoured at the Awards, which were broadcast live on primetime US television on BBC America. Day-Lewis collected the Stanley Kubrick Award for Excellence in Film, adding the first of two awards he received from BAFTA this year. Craig was given the British Artist of the Year award.

The three other awards celebrated the work of four of the US's brightest stars. Director Quentin Tarantino was presented with the John Schlesinger Award for Excellence in Directing; South Park's Trey Parker and Matt Stone received the Charlie Chaplin Award for Excellence in Comedy; and games legend Will Wright was given the Albert R Broccoli Award for Worldwide Contribution to Entertainment.

BAFTA SCOTLAND NEW TALENT AWARDS

The New Talent Awards takes place in Scotland and recognises and rewards new practitioners in the country's moving image industries. This year's ceremony proved to be more popular than ever, with a record numbers of entries and huge press coverage in Scotland and across the UK.

Hosted for the second year in a row by broadcaster Muriel Gray (pictured, with the winners), who brought her usual energy, candid wit and enthusiasm to the proceedings, the Awards illustrated the great breadth of young talent that Scotland has to offer. As a potential indicator of the stars of the future, these Awards are unmissable.

Kate Charter and Joseph Atkinson certainly fall into 'future stars', winning two awards on the night in the Animation and New Work categories for Hannah And The Moon. Meanwhile, 12-year-old Daniel Kerr became the youngest ever New Talent winner, taking home the Acting Performance award for his portrayal of gangster Paul Ferris in The Wee Man.

The New Talent Awards certainly gave the winners and nominees an opportunity to impress, with such guest presenters as Fiona Hyslop, Scotland's Cabinet Secretary for Culture and External Affairs, Lynda Myles, Head of Fiction at the National Film and Television School, Stewart Fleming of PRS for Music, Caroline Parkinson, Director of Creative Development for Creative Scotland and Ian Mackenzie, from the Creative Diversity department at Channel 4, all in attendance.

AN EVENTFUL YEAR

Our Awards are obviously very important to us, but as a charity committed to supporting, promoting and developing all aspects of the moving image our activities reach far wider than the glamour of the red carpet. Our Learning & Events programme organises more than 250 dedicated and varied events every year to nurture, help and inspire the next generation.

Film is a potent force of modern society, able to, in turn, entertain, inspire, affect, enthuse, educate and more. It remains a staple of our events programme, which has seen some of the world's most prestigious practitioners support our work, through masterclasses, lectures, question times, forums, screenings, exhibitions and other innovative approaches.

Our Annual David Lean Lecture, offering expert insight from some of the world's leading filmmakers, was this year presented by multiple BAFTA-winning director Pedro Almodóvar (pictured). As well as being interlaced with his customary wit, his talk, entitled The Cinema Inside Me, was packed with illuminating advice for budding filmmakers, before the Spanish auteur went on to answer questions from the audience.

Our ongoing masterclass series provides a platform for an array of film practitioners to offer their thoughts and advice on the art of filmmaking. The past year saw the likes of David Julyan (discussing composition), Lol Crawley (cinematography), Peter Strickland (sound), Andrew Hulme (editing) and Mat Whitecross (directing), among others, take to the stage at the ICA.

Between August and October 2012, we re-teamed with The JJ Charitable Trust and the BFI to present the third annual BAFTA and BFI Screenwriters' Lecture Series. Celebrated screenwriters Julian Fellowes, Scott Frank, Peter Straughan, Brian Helgeland and Abi Morgan all delivered lectures, sharing their insights with an audience of film-lovers and their peers.

Many of our events are available to watch online at BAFTA Guru, but Sky viewers were also given the opportunity to watch six of our Screenwriters' Lectures, including William Nicholson, Moira Buffini, Frank Cottrell Boyce and Charlie Kaufman, when they were broadcast on Sky Arts 1 in August–September 2012. ►

For the 185 practitioners who form our new initiative BAFTA Crew, exclusive masterclasses and online mini-masterclasses are free. Set up in association with Creative Skillset's Craft and Technical Skills Academy and Creative England, BAFTA Crew is a networking programme for experienced craft and technical crew working in film and television in England. Our aim is to provide a forum for these professionals to meet, where they can enhance their production skills and professional contacts, thus developing talent outside of London.

BAFTA Cymru marked the 40th anniversary of Under Milk Wood, with screenings held in Cardiff and Caernarfon. Director Andrew Sinclair attended, and we collated memorabilia from the film to exhibit at the events.

For the first time, we curated our own theatrical release: BAFTA Shorts 2013. A rare cinematic outing for short film, this selection of the Short Film and Short Animation nominees from our Film Awards in 2013 included Lynne Ramsay (We Need to Talk About Kevin)'s Swimmer and Will Anderson's animated The Making Of Longbird. It was screened at selected venues across the country and won praise from film critics, with The Guardian's Peter Bradshaw stating: "Some vivid and effervescent talent is on display here".

Additionally, BAFTA Cymru screened a winning selection of short films made by children and young people in March. The winners of the PICS Film Festival for Children And Young People saw their films (which had to be made in Welsh or with no language) screened at the Chapter Arts Centre, Cardiff.

Continuing our work with children, we also added a new network of hospices for our Hospice Screening Programme in 2012. This initiative screens films to children with life-limiting ailments and their familes, and was supported by donations gathered by some of our members who ran the London Marathon. BAFTA Cymru's private screening of The Incredibles for families associated with Ty Hafan Children's Hospice in Cardiff (pictured) was just one example of many screenings held throughout the year. We will be continuing this very welcome programme in 2013.

See more details about our forthcoming programme of film events here. •

ARQIVA BRITISH ACADEMY TELEVISION AWARDS

It's easy to forget just how impressive British television is. As well as celebrating the UK's tremendous creative output, our Television Awards, sponsored by Arqiva, is a strong reminder of that fact.

The broadcast of the event pulled in impressive viewing figures, thanks in part to its high profile build up. Once again, we partnered with The Observer and Radio Times (which also sponsored our publically voted Audience Award) on our special photo shoot for the event's brochure. With the title Contemporary lcons, Phillip Schofield, Lara Pulver, Ashley Walters, Professor Brian Cox and Vicky McClure were among the 15 artists featured in the brochure's photo essay. All of the subjects also featured in BAFTA supplements of The Observer and Radio Times in the week before the ceremony.

Our pre-Awards Nominees Party was held at the Corinthia Hotel in London. The Made In Chelsea team (which went on to win the Reality and Constructed Factual award), Mary Berry, Olivia Colman, Paul O'Grady, Meera Syal and Sanjeev Bhaskar were among those in attendance.

Colman proved to be the happiest person at the ceremony itself, picking up two BAFTAs – Supporting Actress (Accused – Mo's Story) and Female Performance in a Comedy Programme (Twenty Twelve). But an abundance of riches was on show throughout, from first-time nominee Sheridan Smith winning the Leading Actress category (Mrs Biggs) to Steve Coogan, who collected his fourth BAFTA, this time for Male Performance in a Comedy Programme (Welcome To The Places Of My Life).

The Academy's top Television honours, The Special Award, presented in honour of David Dimbleby, and the Fellowship, were given to Clare Balding and Michael Palin CBE respectively.

BRITISH ACADEMY CHILDREN'S AWARDS

The British Academy Children's Awards is one of the most important events that we stage: not only is it a celebration of all that's good in children's programming, but it also recognises the kind of shows and entertainers who will inspire the next generation of industry talent.

It's also one of the most fun events we do and always draws an array of talented British stars through its doors. Comedian Eddie Izzard, Outnumbered's Tyger Drew-Honey, Tom Fletcher and Dougie Poynter from McFly, Olympic gold medalist Heather Stanning and Jedward were among those who presented awards this year.

On the night, Justin Fletcher triumphed once again in the Presenter category for Something Special, winning his third BAFTA and becoming our most awarded children's entertainer to date. One of Fletcher's other much-loved programmes, Justin's House, also won in the Pre-School Live Action category. Similarly, Peppa Pig brought home the bacon, making it a hat-trick of wins in the Pre-School Animation category. And the ever-popular Horrible Histories notched up its third consecutive win in the Comedy category.

One of the youngest winners on the night was Khalil Madovi (pictured), who won the Performer category for his role on 4 O'Clock Club.

These Awards are also used to announce the winners of both our Kids' Vote competition (which drew a record 593,674 votes this year), as well as our Young Game Designers contest, which saw two awards handed out for the first time – Game Concept and Game-making.

But the highlight of the night perhaps fell to the winner of the Special Award, Brian Cosgrove, co-founder of Cosgrove Hall, the inspirational animation studio behind such classic children's series as Danger Mouse, proving "He's the greatest! He's fantastic!"

BRITISH ACADEMY TELEVISION CRAFT AWARDS

The British Academy Television Craft Awards may not get the global exposure that the Film and Television Awards ceremonies do, but they are just as important. These Awards honour those behind-the-scenes talents who are at the top of their game.

No one better encapsulates that than multi-camera director Hamish Hamilton (pictured), who in 2012 alone masterminded the live broadcasts of the Superbowl XLVI's half-time show, T4 On The Beach, the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show and the MTV Video Music Awards. Undoubtedly, his finest hour was executive producing and broadcast directing the opening and closing ceremonies of the London 2012 Olympics. Helping to capture the imagination of the British public throughout the summer, Hamilton was a worthy recipient of our Special Award.

This was one of four awards handed out to those involved in 2012's Olympics and Paralympics events, with Olympic Opening Ceremony: Isle Of Wonder winning Director: Multi-Camera; Olympic Games: Super Saturday picking up Sound: Factual; and Channel 4 Paralympics awarded for Digital Creativity. The result simply underlined what a spectacular year of sport 2012 proved to be.

Amish: A Secret Life, Call The Midwife, The Fear and the BBC's The Hollow Crown series took two BAFTAs apiece.

BRITISH ACADEMY SCOTLAND AWARDS

Three of Scotland's favourite sons, comedian Rory Bremner and actors Brian Cox (pictured) and Ewen Bremner, were among those who returned to their homeland to pay tribute to the work of their kinsmen by presenting at this year's Awards.

There was certainly a celebratory feel to the night, which had gained much coverage across the media, including The Scotsman and The Scottish Sun. Among the 18 categories were six special awards: three for Outstanding Achievement and three for Achievement in Film, Television and Games.

One of the latter awards went to producer Christopher Young for The Inbetweeners Movie. Filmmaker Callum Macrae and director Paul McGuigan also received a Special Achievement award each for Sri Lanka's Killing Fields and Sherlock, respectively.

Billy Connolly won an Outstanding Contribution to Film And Television award. Sadly unable to attend the event (although he did send a typically amusing video message), Connolly was presented with the prize in person at a special BAFTA A Life In Pictures event, held at Glasgow's Fruitmarket, a month later.

Director George Lucas paid tribute to Trisha Biggar, who received an Outstanding Contribution For Craft award for her costume design on all three Star Wars prequel films. A third Outstanding Achievement award went to Stuart Cosgrove for his Contribution To Broadcasting.

Young animator Will Anderson had particular reason to be happy. Having been nominated for a BAFTA New Talent award in 2011, he won the Animation category for The Making Of Longbird at these Awards – little knowing that less than three months later he would also be collecting the Short Animation BAFTA at the EE British Academy Film Awards in 2013.

BRITISH ACADEMY CYMRU AWARDS

The British Academy Cymru Awards celebrated its 21st year in 2012 with 31 categories being contested at Cardiff's Millennium Centre. The Awards went through something of a revamp this year, with ticket prices made more affordable for both programme makers and freelancers who worked on the nominated projects. As a result, a record number of attendees were at the ceremony.

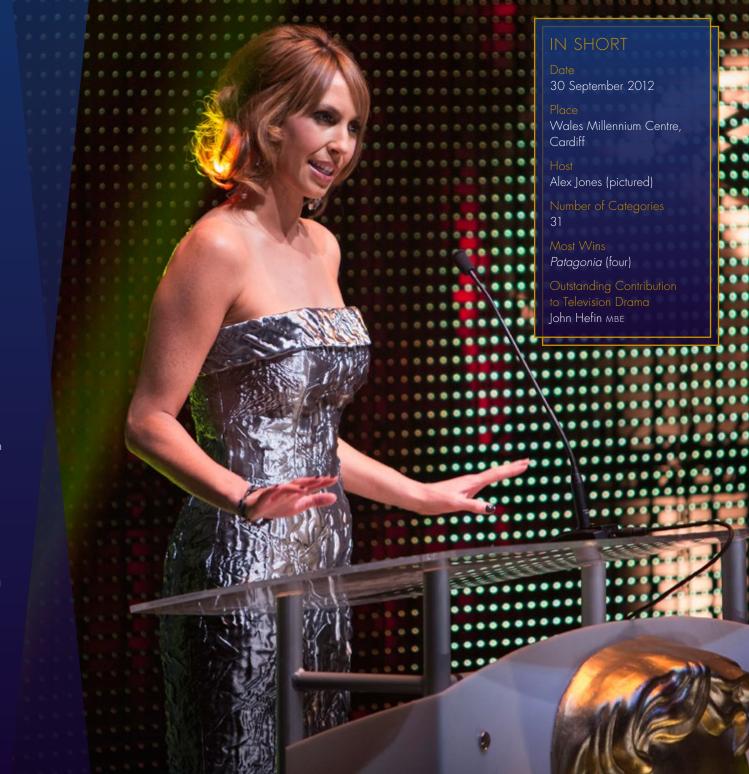

It's been 18 months since our last Cymru Awards, so plenty of expectation and excitement was generated around both the nominations announcement and the Awards ceremony in the media. The nominations were launched at a special event hosted in Cineworld Cardiff by BBC Wales newsreader Lucy Owen. For the first time, BAFTA Cymru also entered into a sponsorship agreement with First Great Western, which provided an exclusive first-class rail carriage to transport London attendees to and from the event.

The ceremony itself was opened in style by Welsh West End star John Owen-Jones belting out classic James Bond number 'Thunderball' (originally performed by national legend Sir Tom Jones). Unsurprisingly, rugby was on the agenda with Lions '71, a documentary revisiting the scenes of the British Lions' victorious tour of New Zealand, a double winner, picking up both the Gwyn Alf Williams award for its historical significance and the Writer award. But it was director Marc Evans' film Patagonia that swept the board, winning in four categories, including Director: Fiction, Editor: Fiction, Sound and Hair and Make-Up.

Actor Robert Pugh was presented with The Siân Phillips Award in recognition of his work in major films and network television, while producer John Hefin MBE (who sadly passed away in November) was honoured with the Special Award for Outstanding Contribution to Television Drama.

AN EVENTFUL YEAR

Television has become so much a part of our daily lives that it's hard to imagine a life without it. The UK has been a leading light in the television industry for many years, with our comedy, costume dramas and news coverage setting the benchmark for the rest of the world to follow. At BAFTA, our television events programme must and does reflect that quality.

Our Annual Television Lecture was presented in 2012 by producer/writer/director and all-round super talented guy Armando lannucci (The Thick Of It). Entitled Fight, Fight, Fight and delivered with characteristic charm, lannucci's main message was for TV practitioners to be "more aggressive in promoting what makes British TV so good. And to be ambitious, arrogant even, in how we sell it to the world".

Another heavyweight of British television, celebrity cook Delia Smith CBE (pictured), was given a BAFTA Tribute in April. At the end of the tribute, Smith was presented with a Special Award for her outstanding contribution to television over the past 40 years.

All TV fiction, whether a drama or comedy, starts with the writer, and this year we've been very active in trying to discover new talent and develop this craft. Double BAFTA-winner Peter Moffat (Criminal Justice), for instance, was just one of our mentors of our scholarship winners in 2012, working with student Luke Stapleton.

'It has been a great pleasure mentoring Luke,' Moffat said. 'BAFTA provides a really useful structure within which to build an effective working relationship. It's a real privilege to be a part of a development process aimed at producing the best possible television writers of the future. I'm very grateful to BAFTA for giving me the chance to take part.'

Another initiative we run to give new talent a chance to shine is our flagship new-writing programme, the BAFTA Rocliffe New Writing Forum, a nationwide initiative set up to discover the UK's most promising new television comedy and drama writers.

COMEDY SCREENWRITING WIT

in conversation with journalist Tom Surcliffe

Thanks in part to an individual donation from a film enthusiast based in New York, the winners of the comedy strand of the competition were flown over to the Big Apple in October for the New York Television Festival. At a special BAFTA New York event, their work was then performed live in front of a high profile industry crowd.

Television featured highly in our ongoing masterclass programme – where leading behind-the-scenes craft talents shine a light on their creative processes. Among the names of those who gave masterclasses this year are Sam Bain and Jesse Armstrong (on screenwriting, pictured), Andy Netley (editing wildlife programming) and David Clews (making documentaries).

BAFTA Scotland established its own event strand, sharing knowledge with the local industry community. The highlight of which was visual effects designer Mike Kelt in March, who talked about how his company Artem designed and produced the special effects for the Olympics Opening Ceremony.

Most recently, we set up the Generation Next forum, a day-long session of masterclasses, panels, Q&As and networking aimed at those on the first rung of their television career ladder. Tim Hincks, president of Endemol, started off the day with a talk about how he got his big break, what makes the best creative ideas and why British television is one of the best places to forge a career.

For those seeking new business, our Commissioners Breakfasts gather together key controllers and commissioners across the television channels to discuss the future direction of their genre. Offering indie production companies a chance to find out what they should be making for each channel and why, this event strand continues to go from strength to strength – and all before the working day starts!

MORE THAN... GAMES

I believe that games have the potential to achieve something that neither movies nor novels can achieve. It's a unique form of storytelling.

HIDEO KOJIMA

BAFTA ANNUAL GAMES LECTURE 2012

BRITISH ACADEMY GAMES AWARDS

A relatively new addition to BAFTA's remit, our Awards celebrating the great and the good in the games industry has become one of the most prestigious dates in the gaming calendar. Recognising the UK's breadth of creative talent, the 2013 Awards saw a new category added to the roster, highlighting the best of British gaming. Fighting off fierce competition from the likes of Dear Esther and LEGO The Lord Of The Rings, the British Game award eventually went to Fireproof Games' enigmatic and deeply engaging puzzler, The Room.

While Best Game was won by Arkane Studios/Bethesda Softworks' excellent first-person stealth 'em up, Dishonored (main picture), the night belonged to the wonderful and emotive adventure game, Journey, which picked up five awards.

However, it was Valve's Gabe Newell who received the most applause when he was presented with the Academy Fellowship for his outstanding and exceptional creative contribution to the games industry.

The star-studded ceremony, held at the Park Lane Hilton, was followed by a celebratory party at which attendees could not only let their hair down, but also get hands-on experience with the two games that had won BAFTA's Young Game Designers awards, Vacuum Panic and Smiley Dodgems. Earlier in the evening, the best in young games development and design talent was also celebrated with Starcrossed taking this year's BAFTA Ones to Watch Award, in association with Dare To Be Digital.

The brochure for the Awards sported six different covers, representing all the nominees for Best Game: Journey, Dishonored, FIFA 13, The Walking Dead, Far Cry 3 and Mass Effect 3.

AN EVENTFUL YEAR

The growth of the games industry over the last few decades has simply been phenomenal. The proliferation of consoles, personal computers and mobile devices in homes – and the recognition that such pixelated heroes as Sackboy, Mario, Moshi Monsters and Master Chief now have – has meant games have not only become a part of everyday life but also entered the public consciousness as much as any film or television series.

The past 12 months have seen us expand our commitment to the art and craft of games, with more varied events, initiatives and activities dedicated to the art form than ever before. Among the many highlights were our Annual Lecture, our Guest Lecture series, our Question Times and, not forgetting, the Young Game Designers competition (pictured).

BAFTA partnered with Abertay University and Sony Computer Entertainment Europe (SCEE) on the latter, which proved to be our most successful contest in its three-year history. More than a thousand young people chose to enter, with this year's competition split into two parts for the first time, the Game-making award, presented by SCEE, and the all-new Game Concept award.

It was a fiercely contested affair, but eventually the winners were announced at our Children's Awards in November 2012: Charlie Hutton-Pattermore (for Vacuum Panic) and Christopher Purdy (for Smiley Dodgems). As well as winning a trophy, their fantastic prize included a visit to SCE London Studio and a chance to develop their games with experts from Swallowtail Games and YoYo Games at Abertay University, Dundee.

From young talent to a games master: Metal Gear creator Hideo Kojima, who delivered our Annual Games Lecture in 2012. Providing a platform for some of the industry's leading visionaries to pass on their wisdom, the Games Lecture, supported by Autodesk, was the perfect place for the always erudite Kojima to discuss his great body of work.

We were as surprised as anyone to learn that it was actually his love of films that initially inspired his desire to tell stories: "I am \triangleright a huge movie fan. Seventy-five per cent of my existence is movies. So being able to come and speak here at BAFTA is really a great honour. Movies and novels have really shaped my existence and over the past 25 years I've applied that to Metal Gear Solid."

Other games legends hit the stage for us this year to illuminate wannabe developers, as we debuted our Games Question Time format. Attendees were able to put their questions to such maestros as Peter Molyneux, David Braben and Ian Livingstone (pictured right with Molyneux). As the QT format proved so popular, we introduced similar strands enabling debate across the film and television industries.

BAFTA Cymru and BBC Wales joined forces to host panels and masterclasses with the creators of the Sarah Jane Adventures and Doctor Who games at the inaugural Wales Games Development Show in Cardiff. The summer event provided an exciting setting for talented companies and projects across the Welsh digital media industry to showcase their work.

Another new initiative was our Guest Lectures, held in association with Creative Skillset. Studio director at Media Molecule (and BAFTA Games Committee member) Siobhan Reddy was the first games practitioner to deliver the lecture to students at Norwich University College of the Arts, discussing games art and design.

Over in the US, BAFTA Los Angeles hosted a special segment at the LA Games Conference in April, where panellists Blizzard Entertainment's James Waugh, thatgamecompany's Jenova Chen, Variety's Marc Graser and Miller PR's Jennie Kong discussed the state of the industry today.

Dispelling the myth that the games industry is only for men, May saw Rhianna Pratchett attend the Hay Festival for our Writing Games event. As the lead writer on the new Tomb Raider, Pratchett knows a fair bit about the representation of women in both games and the industry, and was instrumental in the reinvention of the one of games' most iconic female characters.

GAMES IN NUMBERS

The number of cities which hosted our Games Question Time events in the past year. We visited Sheffield, Edinburgh, Dundee and London, with panellists including Peter Molyneux OBE, Ian Livingstone OBE, presenter Jonathan Ross, Dan Connors of Telltale Games and The Chinese Room's Jessica Curry joining the debate.

The number of awards won by adventure game Journey at the Games Awards. It picked up BAFTAs for Artistic Achievement, Audio Achievement, Online – Multiplayer, Original Music and Game Design.

The number of followers of our @BAFTAGames Twitter account. The most popular tweet was our announcement of Valve's Gabe Newell receiving the Academy Fellowship.

The percentage of young women who had considered a career in games, compared to 38 per cent of young men, as revealed in our Career Pathways Survey.

The number of Metal Gear and Metal Gear Solid titles produced since 1998 by Hideo Kojima, who delivered our Annual Games Lecture in 2012. He has also directed 15, including the original Metal Gear in 1987.

The number of 'reads' the official Games Awards brochure has received to date online since its publication on Issuu.com.

The percentage of young people entering the BAFTA Young Game Designers competition in 2012 who were female – an increase of six per cent on the previous year.

FUNDRAISING

Fundraising is a vital part of any charity, and the money raised this year by generous individuals and organisations has helped ensure our year-round events remain inspirational, informative and inclusive.

Our Academy Circle went from strength to strength. This small group of influential supporters made a significant donation to support our activities, and in return were invited to a series of intimate events hosted throughout the year. Providing behindthe-scenes insight into our work, guest speakers included Imelda Staunton; Hayley Atwell and Dev Patel (pictured); and Kristin Scott Thomas.

Our 2012 Scholarship scheme has proven so successful in the UK it has been expanded for this academic year. Three additional scholars will now receive the new Prince William Scholarship, which has been funded by Warner Bros (see Scholarships).

We also set up BAFTA Crew this year with industry body Creative Skillset. A networking forum for established film and television professionals, Crew members get free access to special masterclasses, including exclusive BAFTA Crew online mini-masterclasses.

While celebrating established practitioners, we also want to inspire a new generation, an aspiration which led to one of our most significant undertakings of the year – a short film by BAFTA Archive and BAFTA Productions entitled 100 Years Of British Film. First screened at the start of this year's Film Awards ceremony, this celebration of the history, talent and creativity of the British film industry over the past century was made possible due to a number of individuals and a generous grant. Designed to inspire the next generation, the short uses 232 film clips set to five pieces of classic film soundtracks. It is being used to introduce our film events and activities throughout 2013.

Three Academy members, Ed Stobart, Rob Bullock and Charles Darby, joined Parry to run the 26.2 miles, raising a total of £7,000 for BAFTA's special hospice screenings for children with life-limited conditions and their families throughout the UK. Congratulations and thanks to them all!

SCHOLARSHIPS

We believe the best way to ensure the future of the moving image is to invest in the lives of those gifted people who will hopefully go on to become the BAFTA winners of tomorrow. Our Scholarship programme was launched in 2012 with that express wish in mind.

It was specifically developed to help nurture new talent, by assisting students to complete a post-graduate course relating to the film, television or games industries. The scheme offered six scholars financial support for a year, the help and advice of a BAFTA mentor (including writer Peter Moffat and cinematographers Lol Crawley [pictured with scholar Craig Devine] and Tristan Oliver) and free access to BAFTA events.

All of the winners of the 2012 scholarship would have struggled to complete their studies without our support, such as Devine, who is studying an MA in Cinematography at the National Film and Television School. "I can honestly say that without the BAFTA scholarship I would not have been able to acquire the necessary funding to continue my second year of study," he says. The funds for the inaugural programme were raised from donations from a number of individuals, trusts and foundations, and we're pleased to announce that we're expanding the scheme in 2013.

Three additional scholars will receive funding from the newly set up Prince William Scholarship, named after our patron, HRH The Duke of Cambridge, KG. These three students will also benefit hugely from Warner Bros, which is not only funding the new scholarships, but will also offer them paid work placements.

The Scholarship programme is not restricted to the UK either: both BAFTA Los Angeles and BAFTA New York run their own schemes. In New York, the programme launched in October and awarded scholarships to five American undergraduates studying media studies at Hunter College, part of the City University of New York. Over in LA, as well as the five regular British student scholarships, a sixth scholarship supports an academic of any nationality at Inner-City Filmmakers as part of our work in the local community. It's worrying that individuals are unable to find the right advice to steer them on their career path.

ANNE MORRISON CHAIR OF BAFTA'S LEARNING & EVENTS COMMITTEE

RESEARCH: FINDING THE RIGHT PATH

One of our priorities is to ensure the future of the film, television and games industries by helping the next generation of British talent achieve success. We're committed to researching new ways to do this, and in November 2012 we published the Career Pathways Report, an in-depth look at the difficulties faced by young people trying to gain a career in these three industries. The results were startling.

Polling 2,077 young people aged 16–24 and almost 200 BAFTA members about their career entry point, we discovered that young people were being needlessly discouraged from pursuing work in film, television and games. The report revealed that many potential recruits dismiss these sectors for reasons not based on talent or aptitude, and worryingly, we found talented artists from lower socio-economic backgrounds and women were at particular risk of being put off. Although more than half of those surveyed had considered a career in one or more of these industries, one in five found accessing careers advice difficult or impossible. And 49 per cent felt their adviser did not know enough about the respective industries.

As a result of the report, we held a summit to tackle the problem and seek practical solutions. Our work to help nurture new talent continues on apace with year-round events and initiatives that provide careers advice for new starters. Our Youth Board also meets three times a year to advise us on how we can engage more with young people, while our BAFTA Guru online channel offers practical and inspirational advice from some of the industries' leading talents.

ONLINE ACTIVITIES

Our biggest development in the online space this year was the launch of our new Awards database in January. The database houses all of our Awards history, and has proven very popular with users. With visitors able to delve deeper into our Awards archive than ever before, we've made the new site simpler to navigate and added more exciting details, including a page for each category featuring winner videos and photography.

February was a busy month for us as we not only launched a third Twitter profile but also an Instagram account and Facebook app.

The new Twitter profile (@BAFTAGuru) has enabled us to give greater voice to the BAFTA Guru brand, supported by new video content featuring JJ Abrams, Pedro Almodóvar, the monthly BAFTA podcast and a host of Top Tips blogs. Instagram has made it much easier to share photos of our activities, from red carpet coverage to going behind-the-scenes at the Television Awards brochure photo shoot, and the number of visitors has grown steadily since launch.

Meanwhile, for the Film Awards, we launched an app on our Facebook page, quizzing fans on how many Best Film winners they'd seen. As well as being a great way to encourage interaction with BAFTA, the app saw 500 film fans engage with it, sharing results and challenging friends to beat their score.

Hundreds of inspiring videos with the cream of the crop from film, television and games can be found on BAFTA Guru.

195 PICCADILLY

It's been an eventful year for our London HQ. As well as continuing to provide the perfect place for members to meet, enjoy screenings and network, a role it has played since 1976, it has also become a venue of choice for a wide range of industry and private client hire.

The venue has hosted everything from global corporate events to exclusive parties; from UPS taking over the entire building during August as a client hospitality venue for the 2012 London Olympics (pictured) through to members hiring the David Lean Room for weddings and bar mitzvahs, among others. Other commercial clients have included Google, YouTube, Channel 4 and the BBC, as well as all the major film distributors.

We've added some impressive new names to our client list. For instance, more than 3,500 global media industry leaders descended on 195 Piccadilly for Advertising Week in March – the first time the event has been held outside the US; and the Royal Mail also chose the venue to launch its new series of collectible Doctor Who stamps. Many of our partners have used the venue this year – Disaronno, for example, hosted a live feed from the Film Awards for its clients in the Princess Anne Theatre.

This historic building has seen many changes over the years, but perhaps the greatest of these happened at the beginning of 2013. In January, we brought our hospitality services in-house with the creation of 195 Piccadilly Limited. BAFTA now runs everything from the catering through to the members' bar staff, so there's much greater commercial synergy and efficiency across the Group.

The success of 195 Piccadilly as both a meeting place for members and a dynamic event space is all down to its state-of-the-art facilities, professionalism of its friendly staff and the heritage and high standards associated with BAFTA.

Discover more here.

195 Piccadilly is such a great venue. We've received many compliments about the space, food, staff and overall efficiency.

BAFTA ARCHIVE

With a history extending back more than 60 years, BAFTA naturally has an extensive catalogue of archive material, including photographs, in-house journals, Awards and events publications, moving images and clips, digital images, audio files, among others. The BAFTA Archive is forever growing, with more content than ever now digitally accessible: last year alone we digitised 60 hours of filmed content, and we're in the process of adding old paper records, journals and much more to our digital assets.

The Archive is an invaluable resource, with many of our activities throughout the year utilising its amazing contents, from such events as our Tribute to Phyllis Dalton through to special exhibitions.

We expanded our Exhibitions programme in 2012, curating shows with the Welsh Office, the Film Distributors' Association and Quaglino's, among others. For instance, the Past Forward exhibition launched at Asprey's London store before the Film Awards, and showcased a selection of unique archive images of iconic Film Awards moments.

Our Archive was also used to develop our BAFTA Heritage Screening strand, which launched in 2012 to celebrate classic British film and television. Marking 50 years of 007, we combined a special screening of Dr No with an exhibition of Greg Williams' Skyfall unit photography and James Bond material taken from our Archive, from the 1960s right up until the present day.

An exclusive screening of a remastered Woman In A Dressing Gown was held in the Princess Anne Theatre at 195 Piccadilly, followed by a Q&A with our Chairman, John Willis, whose father Ted wrote the film's screenplay, and star of the film Sylvia Syms OBE. A screening of The Commitments, followed by a Q&A with director and BAFTA Fellow Sir Alan Parker, continued our BAFTA Heritage Screening programme into 2013.

Explore more of our archival material on BAFTA Heritage.

30,000

More than 30,000 still images from our Awards ceremonies and events (1950–present) form our photographic archive. And it's still growing...

INTERNATIONAL IMPACT

More than 130 territories broadcast the EE British Academy Film Awards in 2013 – our best result ever. If proof was ever needed that BAFTA is becoming a global presence, then that is surely it. And that's important because our mission to support, develop and promote the film, television and games industries is not just limited to the British Isles.

It's our impeccable reputation for rewarding excellence and fostering new talent that attracts such big names to not only attend our Awards, but also headline our events, such as our Annual Lectures in 2012 (Pedro Almodóvar and Hideo Kojima) and our A Life In Pictures strand (Dustin Hoffman, Ang Lee and Tim Burton).

The work of our US branches in Los Angeles and New York continues to expand our global reputation. Events such as the Salute To Mad Men night (pictured), held at the Harvard Club and with an impressive turn out by the cast and crew; and a screening of the four Situation Comedy nominees (Twenty Twelve, The Thick Of It, Hunderby and Episodes) from the Television Awards at the Friars Club in May are cases in point. BAFTA New York also helped place the focus on British filmmaking with their involvement at the 20th Annual Hamptons International Film Festival, co-sponsoring the inaugural Focus On UK Film with the British Consulate-General New York and BBC America.

In Los Angeles, the Behind Closed Doors series welcomed Robert Zemeckis, Quentin Tarantino, Mark Hamill and Ricky Gervais, among many others, to talk about their body of work. While the retrospective film series continued with Terrance Davies, Malcolm MacDowell and a 50th anniversary James Bond screening.

Other LA highlights are the two star-studded Awards Tea Parties held each year, and the Student Film Awards, which this year featured seven finalists from some of the best film schools in the world. For British talent making the big move to LA, we also have the popular two-year Newcomers Program to help support them.

In 2013, we will also be hosting our first event in Asia, expanding not only our reputation in the region but also our pool of talent.

PARTNERSHIPS

Commercial partnerships remain pivotal to the success of BAFTA. Simply put, without our partners, both big and small, we wouldn't be able to do what we do.

It's been a year of both consolidation and growth: we saw both Orange and Arqiva extend their relationships with their title sponsorship of the Film and Television Awards respectively. Orange renewed its patronage for the 16th time through its new sister brand EE, and sponsored the Rising Star award, won by Juno Temple.

Meanwhile, our Official Menswear to the Film Awards, Hackett, hosted two lunches for this year's Fellow and Special Award winners, Sir Alan Parker (pictured with Hugh Hudson, Terry Gilliam, Lord Puttnam and John Hurt) and Tessa Ross, which saw guests such as Barbara Broccoli, Richard Ayoade and Shane Meadows attend. And another long-standing partner, Hotcam, hosted a special dinner in honour of the Television Craft Special Award winner, Hamish Hamilton, at the Corinthia Hotel. We welcomed some new partners into the fold, too. Radio Times joined as the Audience Award sponsor of the Television Awards (won by Game Of Thrones), and generated some impressive PR in the run up to the event, including two BAFTA covers and a 16-page insert. Mayfair Vodka was the Official Vodka to the Television Awards after-party, and G-Technology and the London Studios joined us as new category sponsors for the Television Craft Awards.

Our new Official Beer, Grolsch, was proactive on the social network front, creating a Facebook page to specifically showcase BAFTA content. And Deutsche Bank joined us to sponsor many of our A Life In Pictures events, featuring such amazing talent as Dustin Hoffman, Sir Anthony Hopkins CBE, Tim Burton and Billy Connolly CBE.

We are thankful for the work and support of all our partners this past year; the full list can be found on page 40.

MEMBERSHIP

As a charity that cherishes, promotes and celebrates film, television and games, our main aim is to represent those industries within our membership. While numbers are capped, there has been a move within the last few years to focus on increasing the number of industry craft personnel among our ranks. In 2012, we set about addressing areas that we felt were under-represented at the Academy, particularly targeting practitioners working within make-up and hair, costume design, and games development, among other areas.

It's important to us that we strive to ensure new views and experiences are welcomed into the Academy, and we actively encourage all members to take part in our Learning & Events programme. However, we also make sure new members with Awards voting rights are suitably experienced to judge the relevant categories. Which is why we were so pleased to welcome such BAFTAwinning luminaries as documentary maker Nick Broomfield, director Philippa Lowthorpe, sound engineer Howard Bargroff, make-up designer Claire Pritchard Jones, production designer Arwel Wyn Evans, cinematographer Tat Radcliffe, visual effects supervisor David Vickery, games designer Gary Penn, games developer Tak Fung, games writer Anne Toole and games art director David Hego to our ranks, among many more.

We've also welcomed some strong acting talent to BAFTA membership this year, including Julia Davis, Monica Dolan, Naomie Harris and Tallulah Riley.

The full new members list is viewable here.

Number of Screenings Held

As well as an increase in the number of members' screenings, we also improved our screening attendance in 2012. More foreign language films and documentaries were also screened than in 2011.

Number of Young People Reached Through Our Competitions and Initiatives

460,099 2011 Actual 600,000 2012 Target 593,674 2012 Actual

Although we fell just short of our yearly target, we vastly improved our engagement with 11 to 16-year-old gamers through the BAFTA Young Game Designers competition and new website, which attracted a record number of entrants. The introduction of the practical Game-making award proved very popular. Meanwhile, the BAFTA Kids' Vote site (aimed at 7 to 14-year-olds) also attracted its best figures, with more than half a million votes. Number of Unique Visitors to BAFTA Websites

2.2m 2011 Actual 2.5m 2012 Target 3m 2012 Actual

With the dual aim of raising awareness of BAFTA's activities, particularly in Learning & Events, as well as engage with different audiences through our online platforms, including BAFTA Guru, we had an impressive year in 2012. Unique visitors to bafta.org increased from 1.7 million to almost 1.9 million, while BAFTA Guru (aimed at career starters aged 18 to 30) generated 148,672 unique visitors.

Total Viewers Reached By All Our Television Broadcas

11.5m 2011 Actual 10m 2012 Target 10m 2012 Actual

As the fight for viewers becomes ever more fierce with the proliferation of digital channels, catch-up TV and digital video recorders, viewing figures for our two major broadcasts of 2012, the Film Awards and the Television Awards, held up rather well.

Number of Partner Institutions

92 2011 Actual 100 2012 Target 101 2012 Actual

We were not only able to continue our excellent relationship with existing partners, but also added some impressive names to our Partnerships roster, including the Royal Albert Hall and Sundance Festival. We've developed a more strategic approach to large public events and festivals, focusing on those that allow us to reach new audiences and explore new content.
